

THE REASON

to benefit the Patuko Agam Shrine (circa 1660) currently under restoration

Nepal's Kathmandu Valley has long been the goal of adventurous travellers in search of architectural wonders. As early as 490 A.D. the Chinese monk Fa-Shen recorded his impressions of the gilt multi-roofed pagoda temples and monumental Buddhist mounds, while the medieval cities of Kathmandu, Patan, and Bhaktapur--rivaling Sienna in the complexity and beauty of their townscapes--have been lauded by a continuous stream of explorers, missionaries, and diplomats since the 17th century.

Today, much of the architectural heritage of this Himalayan kingdom survives, acknowledged by the listing of 7 World Heritage Sites in a tiny valley only 20 kilometers square. In response to the number of significant and threatened monuments, the Kathmandu Valley Preservation Trust was founded in 1990 to identify, publicize, and implement the most pressing architectural conservation projects. With six buildings saved and four more in the works, the Trust has emerged as an internationally recognized leader in the preservation movement of Nepal.

The Patuko Agam (reverse side) is a rare example of an esoteric shrine building dating to the 17th century and included in the Patan Darbar World Heritage Site. On the verge of collapse before conservation work began in 1993, the structure has been structurally consolidated, but remaining work awaits funding. Join the celebration to help complete this important conservation project in 1996.
